Martin Luther King Jr was an incredible leader during segregation. He held parades and marches but he did them peacefully because he believed in non-violence. His inspiration was Mahatma Gandhi. MLK yearned for people of color to have the same rights as anyone else. He would do anything for equal rights. On August 28th, 1963 he gave his famous "I Have A Dream" speech. It talks about being enslaved and living equally as any other human. It also talks about what he imagines the world to be one day. This is one of the very reasons it's called "I Have A Dream".

Martin Luther King Jr inspired me to know that anyone- and I mean anyone- can help the world. He helped me figure out my true passion for art and drawing. Like I said earlier, he held parades and marches. He helped me find my parade and march. Though I may have never met him in my life, when I think about him it's like he's right there. I want people to look at my art and go home and be inspired, young or old. I want to let people know if a small, little girl like me can make wonderful art they can too- black or white, tall or short, girl or boy, you can do anything. I may not be an incredible leader but I want to help the most I can. He may not be a super hero like in the comics but he's a hero to me- he's a big one.
